YOUNG AL SOON BECAME A FAMILIAR, FORLORN FIGURE ALONG THE YUKON CREEKS -- AND THE BUTT OF MANY JOKES AND HOAXES! THE GRIZZLED PROSPECTORS WERE UNMERCIFUL TOWARD CHEECHAKOS, OR GREENHORNS -- AND ONE DAY ...

BEFORE THE END OF THE SUMMER, HORDES OF MEN WERE STAKING OUT THE OTHER HILLSIDES -- BUT NONE STRUCK IT RICHER THAN ALBERT LANCASTER, WHO TOOK A HUGE FORTUNE OUT OF CHEECHAKO HILL!

GRUDGE FRANKE

HIS IS THE big fight of the year, ladies and gentlemen," the sports-caster said excitedly into the mike from ringside. "It's more than just another championship heavyweight bout...for this is a grudge fight...between two men who have hated each other ever since they were both kids in the same town.

"It's no secret that Rocky Forman, the champion, was the town bully in his early youth, beating up smaller kids and always getting into trouble with the school authorities and the police...while Kid Blaikie, the contender tonight, was the town hero, the genial but two-fisted boy-scout who was always willing to battle for the underdog. The two kids had many a scrap together...but when Rocky found out after twenty or so day-long battles with Gene Blaikie that they always fought to a bloody draw, neither being able to knock the other out, the town bully left town...to look for easier pickings.

"At the age of 16, Rocky was a professional fighter in the steel-mill towns of Pennsylvania...and he slashed and hacked his way to the big-time before he was twenty. Kid Blaikie, on the other hand, came up the all-American way...winning the Golden Gloves championship in clean fighting before he turned pro. The two fighters fought their separate ways to the top...and then, when the champion retired from the ring two years ago, Kic Blaikie and Rocky Forman, the two top contenders, were matched for the championship.

"You all remember the events connected with that fight, of course, ladies and gentlemen...how the night before the bout, three hoodlums mobbed Kid Blaikie and tried to beat him up. The whole country understood that it was a vicious attempt to injure the Kid so he couldn't possibly win...but no one, of course, could prove that Rocky had anything to do with the plot.

"At any rate, Kid Blaikie broke his right hand in kayoing the three strong-arm men...but he insisted on going on with the bout the next night anyway. The result was a foregone conclusion...with only one usable hand, the Kid proved to be no match for Rocky. When the referee stopped the massacre in the sixth round, the Kid was a bloody, battered hulk...and Rocky was champion.

"But the Kid wasn't through. Before his right hand had healed, he started on his comeback trail. After a few fights, the Kid developed the most lethal and beautiful left in the fight business...that was his kayo punch, while the right was used merely in an occasional blow to the stomach. But the Kid's left was enough to gain him a two-year string of consecutive victories...and the public clamor for a rematch with Rocky Forman has finally resulted in the grudge bout you're about to see tonight..."

Relaxing in his corner, waiting for the firstround to begin, Kid Blaikie dimly heard the sportscaster's voice above the excited chatter of the huge throng. Then the gong... and Rocky glided confidently forward, a leer in his face. The Kid knew what was in his opponent's mind... a good two-handed fighter could always beat a superior one-handed fighter... and Rocky was sure that he had only to watch out for the Kid's left.

As soon as Rocky came within range, the Kid let loose with his looping, powerful left...but Rocky had been ready, and the blows slid off his shoulder. Rocky came forward again, his eye warily cocked on the Kid's left...and then...BLAM! The Kid let loose with a mighty right that caught Rocky by surprise, staggering him. Another terrific right, and another one...and the crowd roared as the champion sagged under the piledriver blows and sank to the canvas, completely out.

With the referee raising his hand in victory, the Kid grinned at the sight of the exchampion being carried off. "Maybe now you know that my right healed a long time ago," the Kid said, "and that I was saying it for you!"

THE MOON ROSE full and silvery over the dense Peruvian jungle, gleaming off the waters of the Maranon River...and off the golden buildings of the lost city of the Incas on the southern bank.

On the northern bank, Snake Rafferty stood up and said to his henchmen, "It's the coolest part of the night now...the time when the blasted alligators in that river will be snoozin' in the mud bottoms. So now's the time for us to cross the river an' loot that Incan city! C'mon!"

"What about bim?" one of the men asked, pointing a pistol at the bloodied figure of Jim Billings lying on the ground. "I don't know how any man could've lived through a beatin' like the one we gave 'im...but he's still breathin'...he's still alive!"

Rafferty grinned and kicked Jim brutally in the ribs. A soft moan escaped Jim's lips, and Rafferty said, "Yeah, but we'll let 'im live a while longer...after all, we gotta be grateful to 'im for guidin' us to the lost treasure city of the Incas. We took his guns away, so there's nothin' he can do to stop us. Leave 'im lie there with that blasted phonograph of his for company...when we finish gettin' a load of jewels an' gold outa the city, we'll come back here an' finish bim off!"

Through slitted eyelids, Jim watched Rafferty and his men pile into the crude raft they had built and shove off for the opposite bank of the river two hundred yards away. Experimentally, Jim mied to move his arms and legs...but the stab of agony that went through his bruised and battered body at the slightest move made him sink back into immobility with a groan.

But Jim knew he bad to get up...he bad to strike back at Rafferty and his men for their treachery. Rafferty had paid Jim well to guide the party through the trackless jungles in search of the legendary lost city of the Incas...but when Jim finally did lead them to the golden city on the banks of the Maranon, Rafferty and his men had jumped him...to prevent him from ever giving away the location of the hidden city. That way, of course, Rafferty could return to the city time after time, until it was completely stripped of all its fabulous treasures.

The recollection of Rafferty's treachery suddenly sent a new burst of strength surging through Jim's tortured body. Grimly, desperately, oblivious of the white-hox knives of pain that every move brought him, Jim raised himself to his hands and knees...and finally managed to crawl to the large, battery-powered portable phonograph a few yards away. The phonograph was the one he'd always insisted on lugging along on every trek he'd made in his four years as a Peruvian jungle guide...it had been his constant companion on countless lonely nights...but now it was to serve another purpose.

With trembling hands, Jim flicked on the switch and turned the volume on full.

Half way across the river, Rafferty and his men turned in surprise as the burst of jazz music thunderously blasted the jungle silence. But moments later they had an even greater surprise as hundreds of thrashing alligators swarmed up from the river bottom, their great tails flailing, their murderous snouts breaking the surface all around the raft.

On the shore, Jim grinned at the men's screams of terror and agony as the alligators' ponderous bodies upset the puny raft and sent the gangmen sprawling into the water to their deaths.

Patting the sides of the phonograph, Jim said aloud, "So long, Rafferty...maybe now you know that alligators are strongly stimulated by music...that they shoot up violently to the surface when they 'hear' loud musical vibrations!"

BUT YOUNG WILLIAM PICKED UP MORE THAN GUNNERY IN HIS WAR SERVICE, FOR HE ALSO BECAME A MASTER AT THE FINE ART OF NAVIGATION -- A TRADE THAT SERVED HIM IN GOOD STEAD WHEN HE BECAME A SHIP'S PILOT IN THE WEST INDIAN LOGWOOD TRADE!
